What you need

- The prompts below
- Optional: paper slips and a bowl for a manual draw
- Optional: a calendar or group chat for a daily routine

How to run it

1. Use the Draw a card button to draw from the deck; the browser avoids repeating cards while you continue drawing. Or click Question of the Day to display the prompt selected from this device's local calendar date.
2. Read the question aloud or send it to the group. Let people answer in one sentence, add a story, or pass.
3. The daily button uses this device's local date when clicked; different dates may show the same prompt. User responses are not saved. Do not require an answer or tag someone to answer.
4. For a printed PDF, choose a card from the static set; printed cards do not randomize or update with the date. There is no score or obligation to complete all cards.

A question of the day should stay optional

A daily prompt is a light invitation, not attendance or engagement tracking. Choose questions that work in a group chat or in person and do not require a photo, purchase, location, or personal history. A person can respond later, give a short answer, or skip the day.

The included cards cover food, travel, hobbies, ordinary preferences, and small plans. The prompts are open enough for different people to answer in their own way without making one person the center of attention.

- Use one prompt at a time.
- Do not treat silence as a problem to solve.

Use the online random draw or daily question

The online Draw a card button draws a prompt from the set without repeating cards while you continue through the deck. This makes it easy to get another prompt without manually shuffling slips or asking someone to pick a number.

Question of the Day selects a prompt using this device's local calendar date when you click the button. Different dates may show the same prompt, so it is not a promise of a unique question every day. The page does not save user answers. A downloaded or printed PDF is a static set of cards and does not include the live random draw or date-based selection.

- Click Question of the Day to display the prompt selected for this device's local date; a prompt may repeat on another date.
- Use the PDF as a fixed printable deck; no online state is needed.

Use a light follow-up

If someone gives a short response, accept it. If they volunteer a detail, ask one related follow-up and share your own answer too. A daily prompt works best when it creates a small exchange and then leaves room for the rest of the day.

For an in-person group, rotate who chooses the next card. In a chat, the host can post the prompt and leave participation open. Avoid using the question to solicit private updates or monitor who replied.

- No answer is required.
- Keep participation voluntary and balanced.
